

Proud Moments Exercise

Have you ever felt a deep sense of satisfaction because of something you, or those close to you, accomplished? The moments when you have felt most proud can help you to better understand your strengths, skills, motivators, and ability to persevere. This exercise will help you to reflect on your proud moments and uncover your strengths and skills.

People sometimes feel like they don't have their own moments of satisfaction. It's human nature to take for granted the things we do that we think are "ordinary." We tend to forget the unique things we accomplish as we carry on with our everyday lives, or to undervalue the things we have already accomplished. If you're having difficulty identifying your proud moments, don't discount events in any aspect of your life, even if they may seem small, irrelevant, or distant to you today.

When you think about your life and your career, what are you most proud of? These might be moments from your work, your education, or your personal life. Pick the proud moment that is most meaningful to you. Take some time to savour this moment and remember how proud it made you feel. What did you accomplish? Who was involved? Where and when did you do this? How long did it take? How did it make you feel once you were finished? What was the outcome? Jot down the points you feel are most important.

[illegible]

What helped you to achieve this milestone? What did you have to do to be successful?

Proud Moments Exercise

Thinking back on your proud moment today, what does this moment say about what you’re good at?

Why was it important to you to achieve this milestone?

What does your proud moment say about you and what you value?

How did you find the strength to persevere, despite the challenges you encountered? What fueled your resolve to not give up?
